A Short History of Penguin Modern Classics

Penguin Modern Classics were born in 1961, when the renowned Penguin editor Tony Godwin decided that the great authors of the twentieth century – such as James Joyce, Joseph Conrad and Evelyn Waugh – had achieved the same classic status as Homer or Dickens, and that the reading public who enjoyed them deserved a separate list of contemporary, beautifully designed editions.

The result was Penguin Modern Classics, with their distinctive grey spines and evocative pictorial covers. Many of them were given eye-opening, avant-garde images by the legendary 60s designer Germano Facetti – a look that, after various incarnations, still inspires their current design. The first books ever published in this new series – including Franz Kafka's Metamorphosis, Carson McCuller's The Heart is a Lonely Hunter, F. Scott Fitzgerald's The Great Gatsby – are still considered landmark classics, read and loved today.

A Short History of Penguin Modern Classics

Over the years, Penguin Modern Classics have shaped the reading habits of generations. They have caused shock and outrage, inspired fantastic films, broken down social and political barriers, and sometimes pushed the boundaries of language itself. They remain an ever-evolving list of books from the last hundred (or so) years that we believe will continue to be read over and over again. From timeless authors, such as Orwell (still the bestselling writer in the series), to the addition of contemporary greats, such as John Updike, Don DeLillo, Penelope Lively, John le Carré and Ludmilla Petrushevskaya, Penguin Modern Classics continue to abide by the principle of publishing the very best, most provocative, exciting, groundbreaking, inspiring works – and constantly redefining what makes a ‘classic’.
